Immigration the Cause of Contagious Diseases Sale of the Tennessee Coal Property Abandoned.

A Philadelphia special says: "Reading is this morning receiving through freights for the South and Southwest by way of the Norfolk and Western.

In Wall street Richmond Terminal stock began to attract attention this morning by its advance. It was influenced largely by the fact that it is rapidly consolidating its heterogenous sections into one harmonious system. THE TENNISSEE COAL PROPERTY.

The tennissee coal property, in Tennessee, has been practically abandoned because of the opposition. Neither Mr. Platt nor Mr. Inman care to insist on the sale in the face of an honest opposition of a respectable majority. The English syndicate which proposed to buy the property was represented by Colonel J. H. Bryant, and is known as the H. F. Kimball syndicate.

A project is on foot enough the intimate friends of General Sherman to raise a fund of $100,000 to provide for the two unmarried daughters of the dead General.

The Aurann, from Liverpool to-day, had among her passengers Mrs. Nellie Grant Sartoris and her three children.

IMMIGRATION THE CAUSE.

IMMIGRATION THE CAUSE.

Inmigration the cause.

It is daily becoming more evident that almost the sole danger to this city from contagious diseases finds its origin in immigration, and the greatest amount of this contagion comes from the Mediterranean ports.

The 798 steerage passengers of the French steamship La Burgogne, which arrived here on yesterday with another case of typhus on board, were transhipped from that steamship to-day to Hoffmann Island, in the lower bay, where they will be kept for some time. The crew of the English steamer Hogarth, with yellow fever on board, from Rio, joined them in quarantine to-day.

Three steamships landed at the barge office to-day 2.536 immigrants. The Aurania carried 18 of the crowd, the greater part of whom were 480 females. The other two ships were Mediterranean steamers, who brought the balance of the immigrants, all of whom were Italians. Among the Italian importations there was less than one female to a hundred males, and they nearly all came from Southern Italy. Twenty immigrants were barred from landing, as they had no money or triends.

HOW THE ANIMALS SLEEP.

A Midnight Visit to the Central Park Managerie.

An interesting study to any one fond of natural history is to note the different positions in which animals and birds rest.

tions in which animals and birds rest. A visit to the Central Park managerie late at night, allowed by the kind courtesy of Superintendent Conklin, revealed some curious sights.

The elephants were no longer looking for peanuts, but lay stretched out on the floor of their cages, their huge legs lying out at full length and the trunk curved under the body. They were all resting on their right side. Near by in the deer-house the different deer had all crouched down for their rest with their forelegs bent under them and the hind ones drawn up, while the head was turned to the right and restedion the side of the body. The orry, with its long borns, was resting with its head away from the body and the horns making an archover the shoulders. The alpaca simply looked like a large ball of black wool. Jack, the denkey that draws the cart with the commissariat of the menagerie, was lying down, and only deigned to blink at the lamp that revealed him resting on a well littered bed with his forelegs slightly turned inward from the knee and the hind ones also drawn inward. The female camel, who has a temporary home in the deer-house, lay on her stomach with her fore and hind legs bent under her, while her head and neck were stretched straight out. The little axis deer was caddled up close to its mother, the two looking like some piece of malagany picked out with white. "Fanny," the Skye terrier, who gives her chief attention to the rats that under her, while her head and neck were stretched straight out. The little axis deer was cuddled up close to its mother, the two looking like some piece of mah gany picked out with white. 'Fanny,' the Skye terrier, who gives her chief attention to the rats that swarm in the house, looked out inquisitively at the visitors, while her pup lay curled up on an empty sack.

In the lion house the lioness was lying on her left side at full length, while the lion, couchant, rested with his head on his fore-paws, that were crossed, his hind legs half drawn under him, and the tail curled in to-ward the body. The pumma, tigers and leopards were all resting on their sides, in nearly every case lying on the right side. The hrenas, pariahs and scavengers of the forest, rested with their hind legs drawn under them, the forelegs stretched out with the head slightly bent to the right. Opposite them the two-horned rhinoceros was lying at full length on his left side gently snoring. The hippopotami showed only their head and backs above the water, and "Fatima," the baby hippo, rested its ponderous nose on the right shoulder of its mother.

In the smaller mammal house, given up almost entirely to civet cats, 'possums' and such like, every animal had curled itself up into the smallest possible space, burying the nose under the stomach, with all their paws drawn up close to the body. The monkeys were squatting about their cages, their heads bewed down over their chests, the arms restung on the thighs of the hind ones. A baby monkey was sleeping cuidled up in the arms of its mother, its little eves peering out inquisitively and fearlessly at the midnight visitors. The bears were resting in various positions, some lying out at full length, others curled up. The two polar bears were all huddled up in a heap, with their necks burned deep in their white fur, and fore-paws crossed over the eyes. Most of the birds were resting on their breasts. In the same inclosure the sea lion had left the pond, and was lying on the recy disection. The la

GEORGE ELIOT AND MR. LEWES.

The Novelist's Second Marriage Was Due to Discoveries Concerning Lewes.

Any uninstructed reader of the paragraphs which have appeared about the late Mr. Charles Lewes might readily suppose that he charies Lewes might readily suppose that he was the son of George Henry Lewes and of George Eliot. The fact is that Charles Lewes was the eldest and only surviving son of George Henry Lewes by his wife, a lady who, I believe, is still alive. The time has not yet arrived when the strange history of the Lewes domestic interior of fifty years ago can be told, which is a pity, for it a more an azing tale than the wildest imagination could conceive.

The second marriage of George Eliot has always been the great mystery of her strange career. She was supposed to be so absolutely devoted to Lewes that their friends could not conceal their amazement when her second marriage took place, less than eighteen months after his death. Circumstances came to the knowledge of George Eliot a few weeks after the death of Lewes which froze up her enthusiasm for his memory. If Browning left any journals behind him, a revelation on this subject will probably be found in them, as he was one of the very few persons who were acquainted with the discovery which changed George Eliot's feelings toward Lewes.

There are very few people living now who are qualified by personal knowledge to write about the early connection between George Henry Lewes and George Eliot, and hitherto this gifted pair have been invariably the object of excessive and indiscriminating panegyric. It Mrs. Lynn-Lynton could only be induced to give the world her recollections and impressions respecting them. I am sure she would produce a most lively and entertaining account, which would certainly excite considerable controversy.—London Truth.

Dangers of Chewing Gum.

Dangers of Chewing Gum.

The fine distinctions required by legal definitions frequently threaten confusion, even when the facts appear to be perfectly clear. There is no room for doubting the inconvenience and danger which may arise from the accumulation of a mass of parafin wax in the intestines; and yet when any legal interference with the sale of chewing gum containing 50 per cent, of this substance is attempted the charming uncertainties and quibbles which arise are more amusing than edifying. In a recent presecution at the Hanley Borough Police Court it was first contended that the fourteenth section of the Food and Drugs act, which relates to the division of the substance in the presence of the seller at the time of purchase, had not been complied with. Then it was submitted that the article was not one of food, since it was suggested that, as sweets are so utterly indefinite in their composition, it was impossible to deal with them as ordinary articles of food. And the climax was reached in the contention that it was not sold to the prejudice of the purchaser, as the complainant said he did not intend to eat it. This was extremely ingenious but the purchaser happened to be the Inspector of Nuisances, who was merely collecting evidence. The case ended for the present with the imposition of a fine on the ground that the substance was sold to the prejudice of the purchaser, inasmuch as it was not in the rature of the substance and quality of the article demanded by the purchaser, who asked for gum and got paraffin wax. If the case is ever taken to a higher court, it is quite possible that it may be argued that the complainant and hot ask for "gum," but for "chewing gum." The following definition might be suggested. "A substance of a very variable composition, ignorantly employed by children, which, when containing paraffin wax, may lead to very grave dangers, and the safe of which should be prohibited.—London Lancet.

WEST MANCHESTER LAND CO.

HAVING PURCHASED WHAT IS KNOWN AS THE

ESTATE, MOODY

A tract of land containing 443 strictly first-class lots, situated a short distance west of the city of Manchester, in Chesterfield county, Va., and forming an elevated plateau overlooking Richmond, Manchester, the adjacent lands of the Southside Improvement Company and Forest Hill Park, the most beautiful natural park of Eastern Virginia. The elegantly-equipped cars of the Richmond and Southside Electric Railroad Company, connecting the park with the cities of Richmond and Manchester, run immediately alongside of this property on Westham avenue, and will carry you there from Main street, Richmond, in about eighteen minutes. These advantages of location, coupled with its noted salubrity, makes this the most desirable property for suburban residences near Manchester or Richmond. As an evidence of this fact, notice the handsome buildings that have been built and are now in course of erection on the adjoining lands.

Of the land originally purchased by the Company about four acres have been sold to H. C. Beattie, Esq.
